

The removal of the appeals process, which was set out in the government's own Nationality and Borders Act last year, could see children deported back to unsafe countries and denied their UNCRC-afforded rights to shelter and protection.